Deserved dean

The State University of New York College at Old Westbury named N.J. Delener dean of the college's School of Business. He will be the school's chief academic and administrative officer.

Prior to joining Old Westbury, Delener was associate dean for St. John's University's Peter J. Tobin College of Business. Prior to that, he was director of international business studies at the university.

As dean of Old Westbury's business school, Delener will be responsible for developing academic policy and curriculum.

Delener had been a member of St. John's marketing faculty since 1989. Prior to joining St. John's, he was a visiting lecturer at Erasmus University in Rotterdam, Netherlands. He also served as an assistant professor of marketing and international business at Hofstra University and as an adjunct lecturer at Baruch College in New York.

Delener is also the founder of the Global Business and Technology Association, an international organization of academic and business professionals. He is currently the executive editor for the Journal of Global Business and Technology and is a member of the American Marketing Association, the Academy of Marketing Science and the International Management Development Association.

Delener is a published author of 10 books and more than 100 articles in business journals.
